

RISK AND RESOURCE MAPS

The Risk and Resource Maps methodology is a tool for the programmes that operate in a territory to promote community participation in development processes. The use of this methodology within the framework of international cooperation goes back a long way. The World Health Organisation and Panamerican Health Organization adopted this method to prepare communities in tackling emergencies. These guidelines aim to promote greater use of this methodology in all countries, within the framework of local planning activities and also in setting up initiatives that facilitate community participation.
